Over the next 50 years, climate change will transform our world in ways we can only begin to imagine. Humans have changed the weather on the planet, and the battle to prevent climate chaos has become the race to survive it. Mark Hertsgaard has spoken and written about this subject for more than 20 years. In his most recent book: "HOT: Living Through the Next Fifty Years on Earth," he writes: "This book is both a father's cry against climate change and a blueprint on how all of us—as parents, communities, companies and countries—can navigate this unavoidable new era."

He will address how these changing conditions will especially affect peoples living around the equator and in low-lying countries as the oceans rise, and these questions: What will this mean for them? What will it mean for us? How can we begin to prepare for these inevitable mass migrations? Mr. Hertsgaard is an environmental correspondent for NPR, The Nation, Vanity Fair, The New Yorker, and the BBC. See <http://markhertsgaard.com/>
